DIRECTOR

DEPUTY

U. S. Department of Justice
Bureau of Investigation
Washington, D. C.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE DIRECTOR

JUN 23 1921
Additional evidence has been gathered suggesting bootlegging activities are being carried out in the small town of Innsmouth on the northern Massachusetts coast. The town is small, out of the way, and receives little outside traffic. Has a small harbor of sufficient size to allow for raw materials to be brought in and product to be exported in quantities of concern without drawing much attention.

On the fifth of May, Bureau agents arrested Milton Chancery in Newburyport, Mass. with 38 cases of low quality gin. Once in custody, agents questioned subject regarding the source of the contraband. Initially claimed to have bought it off a cargo ship out of Montreal whose name he could not recall, but when urged to reflect more carefully stated it was from a Water street warehouse in the town of Innsmouth. Claimed his contact there was a sailor named Bicknell.

Chancery's statement is of interest as it cross references with a lead our office acquired from a C.I. operating out of Arkham, Mass. some 12 miles southwest of Innsmouth. The informant, Francis "Little Frankie" Keisling, said that the O'Bannion crime gang in Arkham has been bringing in increasing amounts of liquor from Innsmouth. The waterfront distillery has been operating at high capacity and O'Bannion's Lucky Clover Cartage Company has been moving loads out of Innsmouth as far north as Portsmouth and as far south as the Boston city limits. The distillery's able to operate with enough brass that they're labeling their product.

Word on Innsmouth is it's one of these tight-lipped small town kind of places with no Volstead enforcement. Apparently there's some kind of gold refinery that might be laundering proceeds. Getting an observer in place will take some patience. An agent with a fishing or sailing background might be able to get a casual look without tipping off the distillers. A few weeks of surveillance should give us a better idea of the extent of the operation there and what action the Bureau should undertake.

Respectfully submitted,

Agt. Thornton Hughes

METHOD OF ESCAPE

Mr. Cole fled from cafeteria and escaped to the grounds after dessert was served Saturday evening. When Cole was first admitted, he was in a hysterical and incoherent state, screaming about "scaly water devils." Since admission he has enjoyed periods of clarity of thought, although easily lapses into hysteria when shown pictures of water, or if the town of Innessmouth is mentioned. (Former factory insp. there.) He became highly agitated upon sight of a jell-o salad at the buffet.
